Merle lived a rich and diverse life. From delving deep into genealogy to jet-setting around the US collecting casino chips, he had a multitude of passions that kept life interesting. His dedication to tracing the Ladd family lineage speaks to his love of history and connection to his roots. He loved to take cruises, exploring tropical paradises and rugged wilderness alike such as the Bahamas, Mexico and Alaska.

His Cherokee Piper and Ultralight Quicksilver MX must have given him a sense of freedom and exhilaration every time he took to the skies. And his commitment to serving his community through the Rockledge Volunteer Police Department and the Lake Jackson Volunteer Fire Department shows his selflessness and dedication to helping others. It's evident that Merle lived life to the fullest, embracing every opportunity for adventure and connection along the way.

Merle certainly knew how to make a statement with his style. His leather top hat was more than just an accessory; it was practically a conversation piece. And paired with his distinctive signature, he left a lasting impression wherever he went. Merle's unique look always turned heads and sparked curiosity.

Uncle Merle was a compassionate, loving person. He always made me smile. I have enjoyed visiting with him on the phone and will miss being able to talk with him about genealogy. He loved his family and spoke fondly of them. I will miss his comforting presence.

I worked with Merle on the genealogy of his mother's branch of the Eby family and was very pleased when he came to Prince Rupert to visit me when he took an Alaska cruise. RIP Merle.
